Education

Ph.D. in Anthropology--Columbia University 1969-75
B.A. in Anthropology--Grinnell College 1965-69

Work Experience

Goodrich C. White Professor of Anthropology. 2007-
Faculty Liaison to the Office of Sustainability Initiatives. 2006-
Professor of Anthropology, Emory University. 1989-2007 (Department Chair 1991-94)
Associate Professor of Anthropology, Emory University. 1982-1989.
Assistant Professor of Anthropology, Emory University. 1976-1982.
Assistant Professor of Anthropology, Carleton College. 1974-1976.
Lecturer in Anthropology, Queens College. 1972 Summer.
Research Assistant, Department of Anthropology, Columbia University, 1970-71; 1971-72.

Field Work Experience

1968 Costa Rica, Guanacaste Province (Open Peasant Community). Undergraduate field research on economic decision-making of peasant farmers (three months).

1970 Ecuador, Otavalo Valley (Quichua Indian Community). Research on community change as affected by new technology in weaving, population growth, penetration of the international market, and resistance to outside influences (three months).

1972-1973 Costa Rica, Puriscal Canton (Open Peasant Community). Research on the structure of peasant decision-making in response to changing agricultural technology (the Green Revolution in Costa Rica). Population growth, ecological disruption, and external economic forces have resulted in changes in land tenure, agricultural methods, and social structure (one year).

1977 Costa Rica, Puriscal Canton, and Ecuador, Otavalo Valley. Follow-up research from previous fieldwork. In Costa Rica, directed student research team on 1) further study of agricultural land use decision-making; and 2) comparative data on "nervios", a folk category of disease. In Ecuador, research on the economic exchanges and social structural patterns of the San Juan fiesta (3 months).

1980 Costa Rica, consultant and fieldwork with team for USAID, to reformulate policy and programs on rural poverty.

1982-1983 Rural Georgia. Adaptive Strategies of Georgia farmers in the face of extended drought conditions and the "cost-price squeeze." Comparative advantages of different resource combinations for different kinds of farmers and the effect on rural stratification, technological change, farming as a lifestyle, and the ecological effects of current farming methods (18 months).

1987-89 Rural Georgia. Determinants of Farm Survival in Georgia. Continued research in Dodge County, to determine long-term family strategies, goals, and resource endowments, and their relation to farm survival in the current crisis (5 months).

Current Professional Projects: Building momentum for cultural change at Emory toward environmental stewardship and sustainability. Currently serving as faculty liaison with the new Office of Sustainability Initiatives (see www.emory.edu/sustainability). Projects include continued leadership of the Piedmont Project for faculty development (sustainability across the curriculum) and Piedmont TATTO (Teaching Assistant Training and Teaching Opportunity) program for sustainability curriculum development for graduate students, Chair of the university-wide Sustainable Food Committee which oversees the Educational Garden Project, Speakers Series, Emory Farmers Market, Sustainable Food Fair, and explorations toward an Emory/Oxford farm. Support "Emory as Place" efforts led by Bobbi Patterson, especially activities with faculty and graduate students; support Sustainability building Reps program, led by Ciannat Howett.

Built momentum at Emory as convener of the Ad Hoc Committee on Environmental Stewardship, co-convener of the Faculty Green Lunch Group, and co-founder and co-PI of the Piedmont Project (faculty development program for Sustainability across the Curriculum--www.scienceandsociety.emory.edu/piedmont). Organized campus-wide environmental stewardship workshop, facilitated creation of campus environmental walking tour brochure, coordinated the Environmental Mission Statement adoption, served on the President's Taskforce for Mission Statement implementation, piloted the College Energy Conservation Project, initiated the Campus Heritage and Stewardship sign project, and helped with the woods walk series and the Baker Woodland restoration projects. Co-chaired the Sustainability Visioning Committee of the strategic plan and chaired the search committee for new Director of Sustainability Initiatives.

In the Atlanta region, began in 2004-5 to foster the development of the Atlanta Local Food Initiative (ALFI), whose vision is a transformed food system in which every Atlantan has access to safe, nutritious, and affordable food grown by a thriving regional network of sustainable farms and gardens. ALFI partners include farmers, community gardeners, farmers markets, institutional buyers, food access advocates, environmentalists, academics, health advocates, and governmental representatives (www.atlantlocalfood.org).

With the American Association for Sustainability in Higher Education (AASHE), offered workshops twice a year for faculty leaders on Sustainability Across the Curriculum: the Piedmont and Ponderosa Models (with Geoffrey W. Chase, San Diego State University). Over 130 faculty from over 75 institutions have participated to date. Co-convenor of the AASHE Curriculum Working Group to develop national guidelines for sustainability assessment and learning outcomes.

Research carried out over the last five years: Transitions to Sustainability: Paradigms, Process, and Policy. Multiple assessments of the impact of the Piedmont Project. Interviews with faculty, civic leaders, community activists, and local food system innovators about environmental issues, engagement with place, campus sustainable food initiatives, and changing daily practices. Current research efforts include the motivations of leaders in higher education in sustainability efforts and the role of local food systems in civic and personal re-enchantment.
